This is an essential 'in-car' book for any road traveller in Australia. Since we share about one million kilometres of road, anyone travelling is sadly, very likely to see or cause roadkill. Certainly millions of small bugs will be killed. This book provides an overview of the types of roadkill, hints on what to do with them, advice on how to clean bugs off the car, and an eclectic mix of other information - from road safety to recipes. In addition the book gives unusual insights into many aspects of Australia's very special fauna, albeit in a somewhat macabre way. More than 250 photographs of roadkill allow identifications. This is an excellent guide on how to avoid and observe roadkill and where to send interesting specimens and why to take the trouble allowing you to contribute to science by offering up the victims.

"I was nowhere near a road when I read Len Zell's latest book. Nevertheless, I almost died laughing several times at his handling of Roadkill. You might not want to eat the Blackheaded Python and the many other animals so well illustrated in the book. But you will see one of the by-products of our motor age in a whole new - informative as well as amusing light."
